Since shuttering Vena Cava, the label she shared with partner Lisa Mayock, in 2014, Sophie Buhai has fully immersed herself in the L.A. design scene. Buhai began re-exploring her passions out West, undertaking jewelry and interior design side projects in her basement, conjuring a new mini world that fostered her passions. “L.A. has this amazing community of creative people that work in an experimental or casual way,” Buhai told Style.com. “It feels very, very free here, and there is less pressure because you’re not being watched,” she explained of being able to work solely on her craft in her basement in Silver Lake. “I think being able to experiment a lot led to the idea for the site.”

Said experimentation paved the way for Buhai’s debut range of sculptural jewelry and objects that exist in the same aesthetic world and are fittingly all handmade in Los Angeles. The collection of jewelry is at once striking and simple, imagined in strong, architectural sterling silver and hand-carved walnut and maple woods that make a bold statement against Buhai’s lithe frame. The objects, a more eclectic range, pair designed pieces alongside curated finds that provide a much-sought-after glimpse into Buhai’s highly stylized West Coast world.

In the video debuting above, Buhai and director Gillian Garcia bring that world to life with a subtly strange humor, with music by Thurston Knudson and Augie Goupin.

Sophie Buhai is available at sophiebuhai.com and select retailers internationally.
